Yale @ Climate Week NYC Agenda is Now Live!

This year's exciting program includes faculty-led sessions in three focus areas: research to impact, global action, and climate & human systems. Visit the Yale @ Climate Week website to check out the topics, and start making your plan to join us at The Yale Club of NYC on September 24 and 25. Registration will open in mid-August!

3rd Annual Climate Capital Summit @ Climate Week NYC

On September 24, join YPS and leaders across energy, investing, policy, innovation, and higher education for candid conversations on what's working and what's next at this year's Climate Capital Summit. This invite-only, free-of-charge gathering brings together cross-sector voices, high-quality content, and engaged participants. Now in its third year, it's back and bigger than ever, expanding to welcome more attendees. or .

Share Your Vision for 2050

Describing the kind of future we want to live in is the first step towards making it a reality. By gathering extensive community input and convening university and regional leaders, YPS is guiding development of a shared and inspiring vision of the future for our institution and the world.

Regardless of your role at Yale or in the community, we invite you to share your vision for 2050. Sign up for an August listening session on our website, or complete our 3-question form.

ELTI Workshop Centers Knowledge Exchange and Practical Tools for Conservation

Tropical landscapes—among the most biodiverse and ecologically significant regions on Earth—are severely threatened by deforestation, habitat fragmentation, and climate change. There is also a gap in reliable measurement, monitoring, reporting, and verification for forest conservation and carbon credit projects. Through a YPS grant, Yale's ELTI team organized a workshop to bridge this gap and explore the implementation of emerging technologies. Read more.

Cracking the Case: The Art of Eggshells

Ceramic glaze is made from calcium carbonate, a mineral that's sourced from open-cast mines. These mines disrupt the ecosystems of large areas, often causing irreversible damage. Eggshells are about 95% calcium carbonate and make up about 80 million tons of waste each year. Could a local ceramicist and a Yale Engineering professor find a formula for a reduced waste, eco-friendly solution? Read more.

Sunday Baroque with Matthew Suttor: Can Creativity Be Taught?

Hear Matthew Suttor, Program Manager at Yale's Center for Collaborative Arts and Media, in conversation with Sunday Baroque host Suzanne Bona as they explore his path to incorporating computers and technology into his musical toolbox and his philosophy of teaching creativity. "Recently," he said, "I've been interested in collaborating with scientists. Looking at collective animal behavior or the way trees breathe. And then figuring out how to teach all that."
